It is an excellent book but it is also one sided (Democrat/ liberal). There are always many reasons America did not act or waited to act, and I feel like other global considerations as well as what was happening stateside was not considered. Legitimately, often times we had military deployed and engaged in different parts of the world where there was genocides happening (Iraq and the Kurds) and when we lost men because we had military on the ground (Somalia). These were totally overlooked and not given much weight. Because of Black Hawk Down and the Marines killed in Somalia only months before Rwanda it isn't surprising we did not enter Rwanda when months before we had actual Marines killed and then their bodies paraded through the streets of Somalia. I think to be fair she could have spared a couple of sentences about why we would have been unwilling to send troops in or at other times engage in any way in different genocides. Otherwise the book is spot on, leaving you wanting better from our country, politicians, and from yourself. She won the Pulitzer for this book.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Are we Responsible?By CustomerInteresting read! Makes it sound like the USA is responsible for the rest of the Worlds failure to protect their own people.

In this pathbreaking interrogation of the last century of American history, Power draws upon her own reporting from the modern killing fields to tell the story of American indifference and American courage in the face of the worst massacres of the 20th century.
