David Robinson : Muslim Societies in African History (New Approaches to African History) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Muslim Societies in African History (New Approaches to African History):

One of the issues is while claiming to have a "New" perspective -- and he did, he seemed to continue the old Eurocentric tradition of quoting only from other Europeans. I didn't see much in the way of citing Africans such as Mazrui, Ahmed S Banguara etc. It is hard to truly have anything new from old minds drawn out across White opportunism. (a reoccurring theme in African history). But he did do a relatively progressive job of dealing with the subject.
The other issue was it was not heavy enough and I will have to buy someone else maybe that The History of Islam in Africa. Athens OH: Ohio University Press, 2000. But they do not have it in Kindle. And Kindle is the future.
Forget about East Africa that was as another reviewer said almost foreign to this quick overview. But for a quick read and a refreshing Western take (from a non-Muslim) this is okay and if the price was $10 bucks not a bad investment

This was one of my texts used for my African studies in grad school - excellent resource - I highly recommend this resource

This book examines a series of processes (Islamization, Arabization, Africanization) and case studies from the Muslim societies of Africa over the last thousand years. In contrast to traditions suggesting that Islam did not take root in Africa, David Robinson depicts the complex struggles of Muslims throughout the continent: in Morocco and the Hausaland region of Nigeria; the "pagan" societies of Ashanti (Ghana) and Buganda (Uganda); and the ostensibly Christian state of Ethiopia. "Further reading" sections suggest how undergraduate readers can pursue research, and illustrations and maps supplement the text.

"Undoubtedly, the importance of this publication goes beyond its uniqueness as the first undergraduate textbook to cover the historical spread and appropriation of Islam in Africa in such a comprehensive manner....The greatest strength of Robinson's case studies lies in the questions they raise, questions that are still acutely relevant to Muslim communities today and are at the center of global debates about Islam, both inside and outside Muslim communities."-

About the Author
David Robinson and Mary Ann DiSpirito have carefully selected over 200 images, most of which are previously unpublished, that illustrate the many changes that Burlington has endured since the 1860s. Included in Burlington Volume II are images of the city that date prior to the 1860s, when our ancestors depended on sketches and engravings to preserve memories. DiSpirito is the author of several short stories and numerous magazine articles in regional and national publications, while Robinson has written several books and many magazine articles. The combination of fascinating images and informative captions will make Burlington Volume II a treasured addition to the personal libraries of residents and visitors for years to come.
