"Ulla Bondeson's study of Nordic moral climates is an outstanding accomplishment. She raises a number of new questions and formulates significant theoretical issues in the study of morality in modern society. It will hardly be possible to engage in subsequent studies of moral climates without taking her conceptual distinctions and empirical findings into account."---Erik Allardt Journal of the Nordic Sociological Association About the Author Ulla V. Bondeson has been professor of criminology at the University of Copenhagen since 1980 and was previously professor of sociology of law at Lund University. She has also been a guest professor at several American universities, including Harvard and Yale.
