If you want to make change happen-- revolutionary change-- then it makes sense to want to understand revolutions-- who starts them, what creates the fertile soil for them to emerge from-- This book is a collection of articles that explores these dimensions and predicts what revolutions will look like in the 21st century.

In this volume, a number of eminent historians, sociologists and political scientists who have spent their lives studying revolutionary processes reflect on the age of 20th century of revolution. They debate questions like: is the era of revolution over? What might the revolutions of the future look like? The face of transformative politics in the future and the directions of social change rest in large measure on the answers. A range of recent cases are taken up, from the intensely backward-looking movement of the Taliban in Afghanistan, to the magical revolution in progress in Chiapas.

'Against the idea that globalization has rendered collective action on behalf of exploited people futile, this book sounds surprising notes of optimism.'
Charles Tilly, Joseph L. Bottenwieser Professor of Social Science, Columbia University
'This book is a long fascinating conversation about whether revolution is still a relevant concept with which to analyze the contemporary world, and if so, under what conditions they might occur.'
Immanuel Wallerstein, Yale University
